God of the ages, by whose almighty hand the founders of this country won freedom for themselves and for us, and lit the torch of freedom for nations then unborn;

God of our fathers and our mothers, by whose almighty hand the founders of this country defined a nation where we are free to believe;

Help us and all Americans maintain our liberties in righteousness and peace;
through Jesus Christ our Savior,

Amen.

Gathering Hymn

“God of the Ages”

(No. 645; Tune: NATIONAL HYMN)

(1) God of the ages, whose almighty hand
Leads forth in beauty all the starry band
Of shining worlds in splendor through the skies,
Our grateful songs before thy throne arise.

(2) Thy love divine hath led us in the past,
In this free land by thee our lot is cast;
Be thou our ruler, guardian, guide, and stay,
Thy word our law, thy paths our chosen way.

(3) From war's alarms, from deadly pestilence,
Be thy strong arm our ever sure defense;
Thy true religion in our hearts increase,
Thy bounteous goodness nourish us in peace.

(4) Refresh thy people on their toilsome way,
Lead us from night to neverending day;
Fill all our lives with love and grace divine,
And glory, laud, and praise be ever thine.

“When the Saints Go Marching In”

arr. John Rutter

Introduction:

Leif Lind

Today we continue what has become a long-standing tradition, a celebration of American freedom. Freedom to believe. We hear readings from the Scripture and from history. We sing and hear music that celebrates our freedom as believers. Some may wonder why we do this in worship today: it is because we are citizens who believe that all are welcome and loved by God; because He created us free to obey, free to believe. As Patriarchs and Prophets puts it, “God made our first parents free moral agents, capable of appreciating the wisdom and benevolence of His character and the justice of His requirements, and with full liberty to yield or to withhold obedience. God might have created us without the power to transgress; but in that case man would have been, not a free moral agent, but a mere automaton. Without freedom of choice, his obedience would not have been voluntary, but forced.” Today we celebrate again that freedom — freedom to believe.

Hymn of Celebration

“For This Land and All Its Wonder”

Carolyn Winfrey Gillette

Tune: CWM RHONDDA

(1) For this land in all its wonder, for each city, farm and town,
For each mountain filled with splendor, for each place where love is found,
For the freedoms we enjoy here,
God, may thanks to you abound! God, may thanks to you abound!

(2) For your peace and love unending, breaking barriers that divide;
For the joy of cultures blending as we live here side by side;
God, we thank you and we pray now:
May we all be unified! May we all be unified!

(3) For your hand to lead and guide us, for your work in history,
For your vision born inside us of a just society,
God, we thank you and we pray now:
May this vision come to be! May this vision come to be!

(4) May we be a nation seeking ways that are both wise and fair,
May our living and our speaking serve your purpose everywhere.
May we follow where you lead us;
God, this is our hope and prayer! God, this is our hope and prayer!

A reading from Isaiah 56:

Ken Webber

This is what the LORD says: “Maintain justice and do what is right, for my salvation is close at hand and my righteousness will soon be revealed...Let no foreigner who has bound himself to the LORD say, ‘The LORD will surely exclude me from his people.’ And let not the eunuch complain, ‘I am only a dry tree.’ For this is what the LORD says: “To the eunuchs who keep my Sabbaths, who choose what pleases me and hold fast to my covenant — to them I will give within my temple and its walls a memorial and a name better than sons and daughters; I will give them an everlasting name that will not be cut off.” And foreigners who bind themselves to the LORD to serve him, to love the name of the LORD, and to worship him, these I will bring to my holy mountain and give them joy in my house of prayer; for my house will be called a house of prayer for all nations.

A reading from Luke 4:

Dolores Herzo

Jesus returned to Galilee in the power of the Spirit, and news about him spread through the whole countryside. He taught in their synagogues, and everyone praised him. He went to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and on the Sabbath day he went into the synagogue, as was his custom. And he stood up to read. The scroll of the prophet Isaiah was handed to him. Unrolling it, he found the place where it is written: “The Spirit of the Lord is on me, because he has anointed me to preach good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim freedom for the prisoners and recovery of sight for the blind, to release the oppressed, to proclaim the year of the Lord’s favor.” Then he rolled up the scroll, gave it back to the attendant and sat down. The eyes of everyone in the synagogue were fastened on him, and he began by saying to them, “Today this scripture is fulfilled in your hearing.”

Musical Response “Let Justice Flow Like Streams” Jane P. Huber; Tune: ST. THOMAS

(1) Let justice flow like streams of sparkling water, pure,
Enabling growth, refreshing life, abundant, cleansing, sure.

(2) Let righteousness roll on as others’ cares we heed,
An ever-flowing stream of faith translated into deed.

(3) So may God’s plumb line, straight, define our measure true,
And justice, right, and peace pervade this world our whole life through.

The New World:

Allan McDonald

The first two lasting English settlements in what is now the United States were at Jamestown, Virginia (1607) and Plymouth, Massachusetts (1620). Jamestown was established as a business venture by London investors.

The Plymouth Colony, however, was settled by people we call Puritans who were dissatisfied with the pace of Protestant reform in Europe. Many came to America to avoid being persecuted for their beliefs. Puritan ministers and leaders, however, sought levels of political and religious conformity that proved unattainable. Many of the Europeans who first settled on this continent were looking for religious freedom for themselves — but not for others. In many ways, they established colonies that conformed to their respective versions of Christianity. Some made it illegal to engage in business on Sundays. Others used wooden stocks to humiliate and torture those they deemed wayward. Some executed women they called witches. Religious dissenters were put on trial and banished, or at least encouraged to depart.

“It was the desire for liberty of conscience that inspired the Pilgrims to brave the perils of the long journey across the sea, to endure the hardships and dangers of the wilderness, and with God’s blessing to lay, on the shores of America, the foundation of a mighty nation. Yet honest and God-fearing as they were, the Pilgrims did not comprehend the great principle of religious liberty. The freedom which they sacrificed so much to secure for themselves, they were not equally ready to grant to others.” (The Great Controversy, p. 292)

One of the earliest demands for religious tolerance in American history came from the Quakers. This movement emphasized the importance of individual religious conscience and rejected the established Puritan and Anglican churches in the American colonies. Like the Puritans, Quakers found themselves persecuted in England and sought to practice their faith in the American colonies — only to be frequently harassed there as well.

Some who pioneered this nation believed that the new government should be religiously neutral. Others who wanted the nation to have no state religion were skeptics. Still others wanted the federal government to leave this matter in the hands of the various states. A number were Christian believers who realized that the only way to guarantee religious freedom for themselves was to grant it to others, too. There were many who agreed with the principle stated by Roger Williams, that “forced worship stinks in the nostrils of God.”

“Roger Williams was respected and beloved as a faithful minister, a man of rare gifts, of unbending integrity and true benevolence; yet his steadfast denial of the right of civil magistrates to authority over the church, and his demand for religious liberty, could not be tolerated. He was sentenced to banishment from the colonies, and finally, to avoid arrest, he was forced to flee, amid the cold and storms of winter, into the unbroken forest. After months of wandering, he laid the foundation of the first state of modern times that in the fullest sense recognized the right of religious freedom. The fundamental principle of Roger Williams’ colony was ‘that every man should have liberty to worship God according to the light of his own conscience.’ Rhode Island increased and prospered until its foundation principles — civil and religious liberty — became the cornerstones of the American Republic.” (Ibid., 294)

Anthem

“Give Me Your Tired, Your Poor”

*Emma Lazarus (1883);
music: Irving Berlin (1949)*

*“Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.
Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed to me,
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!”*

(From poem by Emma Lazarus, inscribed on pedestal of Statue of Liberty in New York)

Creating a New Government:

Ken Webber

242 years ago, July 4, 1776, the Continental Congress announced that the thirteen American colonies were now independent states and thus no longer part of the British empire. A constitution was subsequently written, beginning in 1787. The United States Bill of Rights, consisting of the ten amendments, was later added to the Constitution in 1791.

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution is the part of the United States Bill of Rights that expressly prohibits the United States Congress from making laws “respecting an establishment of religion” or that prohibit the free exercise of religion. George Hay, a member of the Virginia House of Delegates, wrote in 1799: “Happily for mankind, the word freedom begins now to be applied to religion also.

Now the fool may not only say in his heart, there is no God, but he may announce if he pleases his atheism to the world. He may endeavor to corrupt mankind, not only by opinions that are erroneous, but by facts which are false. Still however he will be safe, because he lives in a country where religious freedom is established.”

The first 16 words of the First Amendment — “Congress shall make no law respecting any establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof ” — form the backbone of the American experiment. Together, they guaranteed religious liberty for Americans of every faith, as well as for those who affirm no faith at all. A profound belief in the free exercise of religion motivated the decision to disestablish religion in the new nation. The connecting link between the two clauses constituted freedom of conscience.

When our nation’s Founders separated religion and government, it was a revolutionary experiment, an experiment that has brought extraordinary success. It has made us the envy of the world, and it is the goal of Americans United for Separation of Church and State to make sure that wise course of action continues.

Hymn of Response

“This Is My Song”

*Lloyd Stone, Georgia Harkness
Tune: FINLANDIA (Sibelius)*

(1) This is my song, O God of all the nations,
A song of peace for lands afar and mine;
This is my home, the country where my heart is;
Here are my hopes, my dreams, my holy shrine:
But other hearts in other lands are beating
With hopes and dreams as true and high as mine.

(2) My country's skies are bluer than the ocean,
And sunlight beams on cloverleaf and pine;
But other lands have sunlight too, and clover,
And skies are everywhere as blue as mine:
O hear my song, thou God of all the nations,
A song of peace for their land and for mine.

(3) May truth and freedom come to every nation;
May peace abound where strife has raged so long;
That each may seek to love and build together,
A world united, righting every wrong;
A world united in its love for freedom,
Proclaiming peace together in one song.

Religion without governmental sanction or support: How would this actually work out in a rapidly expanding nation? It soon became necessary for the U.S. Supreme court to distinguish between the kinds of church controversies that civil courts should deal with and those they should not. The Supreme Court declared, "Whenever the questions of discipline or of faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom or law have been decided" by the highest authorities in the church, all federal courts, must accept such decisions as final." Other nations may act differently, Justice Samuel Miller admitted, but in the United States citizens have "the full and free right to entertain any religious belief, to practice any religious principle, and to teach any religious doctrine which does not infringe on personal rights." To emphasize its point, the Court pointed out that "the law knows no heresy, and is committed to the support of no dogma, the establishment of no sect."

In the 19th century, then, federal attention to First Amendment religion cases was quite limited. In the 1840s and 1850s the most passionate controversy of all concerned slavery. This bitter issue divided families, churches, and entire denominations, and ultimately the country itself. The major implication of the Civil War and its aftermath for church-state matters is found in the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1868. That amendment reads as follows: "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

Hymn of Response "In Egypt Under Pharaoh" Dosia Carlson; Tune: LANCASHIRE

(1) In Egypt under Pharaoh the Israelites were bound,
From plagues and tribulations no respite could be found.
Praise God who in surprising ways, gave passage through the waves.
Our Liberator rescues, our Liberator saves.

(2) From Africa to gang-planks, across a friendless sea,
Black captives harshly treated all struggled to be free.
Praise God who strengthened advocates with power that does and dares.
Our Liberator rescues, our Liberator cares.

(3) Wherever hurting humans unjustly live in pain,
The hungry, homeless, hopeless, cry out for growth and gain.
Praise God whose great redeeming love each servant freely gives.
Our Liberator rescues, our Liberator lives!

Persecution & the Seventh-day Adventist Response:

Kathie Glennie

Below the federal level, however, a whole universe of Sunday law cases opened up, to be heard by municipal and state courts and decided in a wide variety of ways. Actually, Sunday laws were universal in the colonies, waned after the American Revolution, then expanded in the early 19th century.

America's last great surge of Sunday laws, which took place in the 1880s, was particularly hard on Seventh-day Adventists, many of whom were imprisoned for weeks or months, and sometimes assigned to chain gangs. The SDA Encyclopedia reports that many Adventists at that time served lengthy prison terms for disrupting the Sunday sacredness. Fears were high. Recent research suggest that several teachers and students at Southern Adventist University, including the principal, were imprisoned, but did not actually serve on chain gangs, though other local Adventists did.

Adventists, expecting Christ to return to earth well before the end of the 19th century, did not see these events as a foretaste of a final conflict generations later, but as the early stages of the final conflict itself. A national Sunday law seemed imminent, and the arrests and prison sentences seemed to be leading to a not-very-distant death penalty.

This prompted the denomination's first religious liberty journals and organizations. Before the actual threat to Sabbath observance (as opposed to the theoretical danger that had been anticipated since the identification of the two-horned beast in the 1850s), Adventists had not been actively concerned with religious liberty. Once that threat had manifested itself, religious liberty became a major Adventist preoccupation.

Most of today's multi-generation Adventists do not remember specific stories of our ancestors being persecuted by over-zealous and fearful Christians. What did those early Adventists think about while in prison, breaking rocks, or sitting idly on the farm when work needed to be done? We know they developed firm convictions that religious people who passed laws requiring others to conform to religious doctrines, were serving Satan, not God. The evil sprang not just from the fact that the religious people enforced rest on the wrong day, but that they were enforcing a religiously motivated law at all. They concluded that the combination of public fear, religious certainty, and civil law had proven repeatedly to be capable of the greatest evils in history, regardless of the particular beliefs enforced. This led our Church to assert that it will “defend the religious liberty of all people, including those with whom we may disagree.”

Adventists serving in U.S. prison gangs for failing to observe Sunday laws

Hymn

“God of Grace, and God of Glory”

(No. 607; Tune: CWM RHONDDA)

(1) God of grace and God of glory, on thy people pour thy power;
Now fulfill thy church’s story, bring her bud to glorious flower.
Grant us wisdom, grant us courage, for the facing of this hour.

(2) Lo, the hosts of evil round us scorn thy Christ, assail his ways;
From the fears that long have bound us, free our hearts to faith and praise.
Grant us wisdom, grant us courage, for the facing of this hour.

(3) Cure thy children’s warring madness, bend our pride to thy control;
Shame our wanton, selfish gladness, rich in goods and poor in soul.
Grant us wisdom, grant us courage, lest we miss thy kingdom’s goal.

(4) Set our feet on lofty places, gird our lives that they may be
Armored with all Christ like graces in the fight to set all free.
Grant us wisdom, grant us courage, that we fail not man nor thee.

The Twentieth Century to Today:

Dave Ferguson

While the U.S. Supreme Court heard relatively few church-state cases during the 19th century, this changed dramatically with the 20th century, due to several factors.

First, the court began during the 1940s to use the Fourteenth Amendment as a means of applying the First Amendment’s religion clauses to the states. Second, many new organizations began challenging traditional religious practices in the public arena, including Americans United for Separation of Church and State, which the Adventist Church worked with. Third, the growth of religious pluralism throughout the nation meant that religiously homogeneous communities were rapidly becoming a thing of the past. Fourth, the federal government became vastly larger and more intrusive than previously.

There is a long history of back-and-forth struggle for the rights of churches and religious people to be exempt from secular laws that conflict with their beliefs. Here are a few key events:

- 1878, Reynolds v. United States. The U.S. Supreme Court rules that Mormons may not practice polygamy contrary to law, saying this would “permit every citizen to become a law unto himself.”

- 1940, Cantwell v. Connecticut. The Supreme Court ruled that the Federal Bill of Rights trumps state laws that limit religious freedom. Specifically, a Jehovah's Witness could not be prosecuted for making people angry by door-to-door witnessing.
- 1963, Sherbert v. Verner. The Supreme Court rules that states must protect rights of citizens to practice their religion unless it can show that it has a "compelling interest" for limiting that freedom. "Only the gravest abuses, endangering paramount interests, give occasion for 'permissible limitation.'" So a Seventh-day Adventist could collect unemployment after being fired for not working on Saturday.
- 1965 and 1970. During the long Vietnam War, which grew increasingly unpopular, conscientious objection took some different turns that required Supreme Court involvement. For example, What is religion? What is the meaning of the term "conscientious"?
- 1990, Oregon v. Smith (Peyote case). The Supreme Court ruled that "the right of free exercise does not relieve an individual of the obligation to comply with a valid and neutral law of general applicability." So Oregon did not have to pay unemployment compensation to two men who were fired for using the religious drug peyote in a tribal ceremony.

It is clear that historic Adventists will usually stand on the side of a minority group when that group is faced with laws enforcing religious restrictions. And we can expect to be misunderstood by our evangelical colleagues, who will see us as betraying the cause of God. As we face current and future social issues, will standing with the unpopular minority still be our position?

Today Adventist attorneys are divided on the best way to protect the rights of religious groups and individuals. Some say we can best protect religious freedoms by promoting our own beliefs. Others say that will only invite retaliation in legislatures, government administrative offices, and courts, and will be misunderstood by the general public. Some maintain that the best strategy is still to support freedom of conscience for everyone, while others argue that will only result in appeasement, and will be misunderstood by other religious people.

Perhaps we should be less concerned with what position the church takes on a political issue than with whether or not we are known to offer grace and love and hope — hallmarks of Glendale City Church — things that are very difficult to communicate in the heat of a political battle. What matters most is that we all strive in every honorable way to foster "liberty and justice for all." And "all" includes everybody.

Go to proclaim the freedom of Jesus Christ!
Go to live the freedom of America!
Go to protect the freedom to believe!
May God bless us each! God bless America!
God bless the world we love!

Congregational Hymn of Response

“God Bless”

Lyrics: B. Lundblad
Tune: GOD BLESS AMERICA

God bless the world we love, stranger and friend,
Go before us, restore us with a hope that despair cannot end
Ev’ry people, ev’ry nation, mighty ocean, heaven’s dome,
God bless the world we love, our only home.

NEXT WEEK @ GLENDALE CITY CHURCH: Saturday, July 7

- 11:00 a.m., Morning Worship: Pastor Todd Leonard

In light of today's examination of religious freedom, we regret to announce the passing on June 17 of our Church's longtime religious liberty leader, Roland Hegstad. As editor of Liberty Magazine for 35 years, Hegstad worked tirelessly to support and strengthen religious liberty for all faiths and religions. He recognized the inherent tendency — so clearly shown throughout human history — to forcefully impose one's own religious values and beliefs on others.

We as Christians should be aware that in today's world we are still in jeopardy from both Christian and non-Christian fundamentalism of losing the freedoms of conscience our forebears worked so hard to achieve. As has often been said, the price of religious liberty is constant vigilance!
